LEGISLATURE PASSES BILL FOR MUSEUM BUILDING—GOVERNOR R. S. STERLING HAS YET TO ACT

Addition to Power House, Paving, New Boiler Among Items in Appropriations Bill—Governor May Veto All the Bills and Call Extra Session of the Legislature.

The regular session of the 42nd Legislature came to a close in Austin Saturday, having passed the general appropriation bills, after a threat to refuse to accept the free conference reports had been voted down by the House of Representatives. Late Friday night indications were that the House would refuse to accept the free conference reports, owing to the fact that this conference had restored the salary cuts which had been voted by the House, and had restored the buildings which had been rejected by a very large vote by the House.

The only two buildings which had been approved by the House were the $25,000 museum-library unit for the West Texas State Teachers College, and the $40,000 hospital for C. I. A. at Denton. The Senate had approved several major buildings, which were badly needed at other educational institutions.

Governor Sterling has 20 days in which to act upon the appropriations bills. It is predicted by newspaper correspondents that he will veto all of the appropriations bills, and call a special session within the coming month. He has indicated no desire for a special session unless the same is found to be absolutely necessary. Oil proration and other legislation affecting the oil industry is being urged as absolutely necessary for a special session, and this may induce the Governor to act unfavorably upon the appropriation bills, and send them back to the law makers.

W. T. fared very well in the bill which passed Saturday. With all salaries restored and four new places approved for the coming year, faculty members expressed great confidence in the future work of the institution. President J. A. Hill was in Austin during the past week assisting in checking the bill to see that no errors might occur in the final passage.

In addition to the museum-library item, W. T. received $15,000 for an addition to the power plant to house the manual training department, $6,000 for paving, $7,500 for a new boiler, $1,000 for

IDENTIFIED BY BANK OFFICIALS AS THE MAN

Named Jim Thomas as Other Man Connected with Deal—Talks Freely with Officers Friday.

With the identification of James Creighton Friday at Joplin, Mo., by officers of the First National Bank of anyon, as one of the robbers who held up this institution on the morning of January 10, followed by a partial account of the robbery, most of the details in connection with the robbery were disclosed to local officials, who are now endeavoring to apprehend others connected with the affair.

W. C. Black, cashier; Miss Christine Upchurch, bookkeeper; Deputy Sheriff Bob Barnett and District Attorney Edward W. Thomerson interviewed Creighton, who is in jail at Joplin, on the charge of murder of Coyne Hatten, son of a wealthy Joplin citizen, in Webb City, Mo., last week. Both Mr. Black and Miss Upchurch definitely identified Creighton as being one of the two men who had met them at the door of the bank on the morning of January 10th, conducted them to the director's room, where they were gagged and bound in chairs while the bank's safe was robbed of all currency, and the two thieves escaped by the back door. After identication, Creighton talked freely with the officers, telling them most of the details in connection with the robbery, and expressing freely the opinion that he might soon be hanged for the shooting of the Missouri man, which he termed as an accident following a dispute over an auto collision between cars driven by Creighton and Hatten.

In connection with the robbery, Creighton stated that the job was

Farmers Asked to Get Chamber of Com. Seed Now

All farmers who have purchased Chamber of Commerce seed and who have not called for their seed are urged to do so at once. County Agent Upchurch is in charge of the seed distribution. Mr. Upchurch states that he plans to clear up the seed project at once and requests the farmers to get their seed not later than this weekend.

Only 600 pounds of maize remains unsold out of the 18,200 of certified seed purchased. Seed purchased included hegari, kaffir and red top. These have been sold to 111 farmers of Randall County. The county agent is anxious to sell the few remaining sacks of maize and requests that those who plan to buy the pure-bred seed at actual cost from the Chamber of Commerce do so at once.

This will bring to a close the third season that the Canyon Chamber of Commerce has purchased certified field seeds in large quantities and sold it to the farmers of Randall County at actual cost. Much purebred seed has been introduced into the county and the farmers have more of the seed each year. This project of the Chamber of Commerce is recognized as an outstanding piece of work by other organizations of the Panhandle.

More Than 1,000 People Visit Park During Day Sunday

More than 1,000 people visited the Palo Duro Park east of town Sunday, according to the register at the park headquarters. There has been an average of almost 50 people to the park every day since it was opened on May 17, Ray V. Davis, custodian, stated.

It is surprising to note the number of visitors from distant points, Mr. Davis says. According to the register people from the following distant points as well as practically every city and town in the Panhandle have visited the park since the opening: Houston, St. Louis, Evansville, Ind.; Ft. Smith, Ark.; Long Beach and Hollywood, Calif.; Washington, D. C.; Dallas, Fort Worth, Chicago, Emmett Idaho; San Angelo, Eugene, Ore.; Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Louisville, Ohio; Goodrich, Kan.; Topeka, Kan.; Farmland, Ind.; Artesia, N. M.; Bethany, Okla.; Memphis, Tenn., and other points.

A general impression among the visitors to the park is that an admission fee is charged. The Chamber of Commerce officials ask the co-operation of everyone interested in the park project to aid in spreading the word that there will be no fee charged to visit the park and stay as long as a person wishes to do so.

Ray Davis, custodian, urges that all Canyon people make a drive to the park and spend a day or part of a day and really see what is there. He says that a number of people do not realize what a beautiful spot it is and a great many of them have never been out to see it. Since the opening a scenic drive has been made around the rim of the canyon for a distance of about a mile and a half.

Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Lester attended the Old Pioneers reunion held at Plainview Saturday.

SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AWARDED W. T. STUDENTS

CHECK FOR $500 PRESENTED TO MISS NEVILLE WRENN

Outstanding Achievements of the Past Year Are Recited by President Hill

Scholarships for the year were made at the commencement exercises by President J. A. Hill Wednesday morning. He recited the many achievements of the year just closing. Among them he mentioned the fact that the Buffalo football team finished the season undefeated in the T.I.A.A.; the T.I.I.A. championship in basketball, and the winnings of the Prairie in the Texas Intercollegiate Press Association.

An outstanding recognition for a student of the college and for the college itself was the awarding of the $500 prize offered by Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Garvan of New York City, given through the American Chemical Society, for the best essay written on some phase of chemistry by a student in teachers colleges over the United States. Miss Neville Wrenn was the recipient of the award and was presented with the check Wednesday morning. This is the second time the award has been given to a student in the West Texas State Teachers College within the past five years. Miss Wrenn is a senior.

Rain Tuesday of .30 Helps Wheat In This Section

Rain amounting to .30 of an inch fell in Canyon Tuesday afternoon. The rain was not general over the Panhandle, but showers were reported in many sections.

Wheat farmers state that a general rain is badly needed at once. The early wheat suffered less than the late crop during the hot weather of the past ten days. Monday was reported to have the highest temperature of the year, the mercury going to 93 degrees. A general rain over the plains at this time would be of great benefit to the wheat crop, as well as the pastures.

Scholastics in Canyon School District Given

There are 838 scholastics in the Canyon Independent School district, according to figures released last week by J. W. Shanklin, secretary of the school district. The scholastics show a drop from last year, but that is due to the fact that last year the new law including children six years of age became effective for the first time and the scholastics jumped from 761 for 1929 to 907, then slightly decreased this year.

Despite the fluctuation, which is mainly attributed to the change in the law regarding the school age, the scholastics for the district are far above an average of the years past, Mr. Shanklin states.

Mr. and Mrs. John Guthrie are in Dallas, where their baby is receiving medical treatment.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES HELD AT COLLEGE WEDNESDAY MORNING; DIPLOMAS ARE PRESENTED TO 104

J. Evetts Haley, Former Student was Commencement Speaker; First Time in History for Ex-Student to Deliver Commencement Address.

FOUR MEMBERS PITTS FAMILY GRADUATE AT W. T.

Four members of the Pitts family will receive graduating honors from W. T. this year.

Miss Beth Pitts, a college senior, received her B. S. degree here Wednesday.

Royal and Pollyanna Pitts will be graduated from the West Texas High School Friday evening. Jackie Pitts, the fourth member of the family to receive graduation honors was graduated from the 7th grade in the West Texas Demonstration school.

For the first time in the history of the institution a former graduate delivered the commencement address of the West Texas State Teachers College to the graduating class, when J. Evetts Haley of Austin addressed the class of 1931 Wednesday morning as the 21st commencement exercises of the college were held.

To the strains of the processional "Priests March, Aida," Verdi, played by the college orchestra under the direction of Prof. Wallace R. Clark, member of the faculty and the 104 members of the graduating class marched to the places reserved for them.

In addressing the asembly, President J. A. Hill commented on the interest manifest by the citizens of Canyon in the commencement exercises of the college. He declared that the attendance this year was the largest in the history of the college. The exercises marked the 21st commencement since the establishment of the institution and its 13th as a senior college.

In introducing the speaker of the morning, President Hill stated that Evetts Haley was the first former graduate of the college to address a graduating class. He asserted that Haley, a graduate of 1925, was an outstanding leader among the students when he was attending college here. Editing the college yearbook in his senior year, Haley produced an outstanding piece of work.

Mr. Haley took for his subject "Pioneers" developing an unusual treatment of different phases of it.

"This land of ours stands out as a part different from all other sections of the state and nation," he asserted, in speaking of the Plains country. He continued by adding, "This country will not be remembered because it ate spinach and wore spats, but because of its beans and sour dough biscuits."

The speaker pictured the progress of this section from the time before it was occupied by civilized man to the present day of modern developments and achievements. He commented upon the loyalty of the native sons and daughters of this treeless, waterless Plains. The tradition of loyalty he remarked

MEMBER TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION

THE 42nd LEGISLATURE

By Clyde W. Warwick.
Representative 123rd District

It is probably a little early following adjournment of the 42nd Legislature to pass judgment upon the work of the law-making body. Too many bills of great importance are pending action of the Governor to really pass judgment upon the work of the entire session of the Legislature.

A most vituperative attack was made on the floor of the House against the members of the Legislature when the proposal was made to remain longer in order to close up important pending measures. It was charged the members had wasted their time in non-essentials while the big problems had been sidetracked. Nevertheless, the House overwhelmingly voted down the suggestion of the Governor to recess and then come back and complete important measures which are now upon the calendar.

Regardless of what the people may think the facts are that this has been a hard working Legislature. The members are not to be blamed for the fact that this session has been confronted with such complex measures. The members of the Legislature have made honest efforts and have worked long and diligently with the view of solving in an equitable manner the many perplexing problems which were upon the calendar.

Those who have been closely associated with this session of the Legislature have highly praised the leadership of Lieutenant-Governor Edgar Witt and Speaker Fred Minor, both having displayed real statesmanship in presiding over and piloting the Houses in the trying times when bills of great controversial nature were being considered. As an indication of the interest taken by the members of this session it may be pointed out that at no time during the 131 days was it necessary to put the House under call for the purpose of maintaining a quorum. The House was placed under call several times for the purpose of bringing in all members to vote upon important measures. This was true upon four occasions when the highway bond issue was considered, but then only for the purpose of making sure that all members who were in the city were given an opportunity to express their opinion upon this important measure. At other times the attendance averaged around 120 members, which is certainly a very great improvement over the 41st Legislature, which had to be kept under call a great part of the time in order to maintain a quorum.

There is no question about a special session being called within a short time. The oil industry is in almost deplorable condition. The cotton farmers are broke. Whether or not the Legislature will be able to solve these problems is very uncertain. It has long been recognized that the economic problems are seldom if ever solved in Legislative Halls. It is true that oil legislation might help the oil man, and acreage restriction might help the cotton man, but there is an economic problem back of this situation with which the Legislature will be unable to cope. In spite of the fact that Governor Sterling has stated time and again his opposition to a special session it is very likely he will be forced to call one.

There are probably many citizens of the Panhandle who will feel disappointed in the failure of the major park bill. They should not be disappointed as it was impossible to secure an appropriation of one and a half million dollars for park purposes with prevailing economic conditions.

This writer has often pointed out what he believes will be the only solution of a major park in the Palo Duro Canyon. He believes that the only way such a park will be started is for the citizens to buy a sufficient strip of land and then induce the state and federal governments to build a first class highway from Hall County to Randall County in the Palo Duro Canyons. This would provide a scenic drive and give sufficient acreage for camping purposes upon the land bought for this purpose. A bill has been passed which would make possible such a park. The bill provides that cities and counties may establish parks and maintain them through local taxes.

The state bond issue is certain to take an important part in the campaign for next year. It is assured that Governor Sterling will make the bond issue the principal plank in his platform in his election. It is rumored in political circles that Senator Small may be induced to make a campaign against the Governor upon the anti-bond platform. Senator Small was the most prominent opponent of the bond issue in the Senate and during his campaign last year bitterly opposed the state-wide issue.

For the first time in many sessions the Senate has attached tax measures to House bills. The cigarette tax was tacked on the natural gas tax by the Senate after it had passed the House. When the so-called peddlers bill was passed by the House to the Senate an omnibus tax measure was added by the Senate which included an increase in the sulphur tax and a new tax on cement. Many other tax proposals were made but were rejected by the House.

The failure of the congressional re-districting bill was one of the greatest disappointments of the session. The Senate refused to accept the free conference bill, which was very largely written by Senator Small. This bill would give West Texas two new congressmen, and South Texas one man, according to the distribution of poulation shown by the federal census. East Texas claimed that the oil boom had brought thousands of new citizens to that section, and they refused to abide by the decision of the federal census. Unless a special session of the legislature passes a re-districting bill, there will be three congressmen-at-large to be elected next year. It is positive that Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ferguson, both former Governors, will be candidates for this office. There will likely be a dozen or more candidates, which will insure that both the Fergusons will be in the second primary.

Passage of the appropriations bills Saturday came as a distinct surprise. After the House had butchered the bills, eliminating all buildings except the small ones for W. T. and C. I. A., and reducing all salaries, the free conference restored all of the reductions made by the House. It was predicted that the House would reject the free conference reports, thus forcing a special session. Word came from the Governor to pass the bills, and let him see what he could do with them, and if necessary he would veto all of the bills and call a special session sometime within the coming month.

There was a peculiar change in attitude during the closing hours. Those who had most vigorously fought the appropriations changed attitude and urged their passage. As a result the bills are now on the desk of the Governor. Whether or not he will veto the entire bills, or simply eliminate such items as he sees fit will be a matter for his decision during the 20 days in which he has to act upon these bills. His friends are urging him not to veto the bills as a whole, but simply to eliminate items which he believes are not necessary at the present time. This could be done at a very great saving to the state, and might eliminate the necessity of a special session during the coming summer.

The writer is mighty glad the regular session of the 42nd Legislature is at an end, and that he is back in Canyon. It has been the hardest and most trying four months he has ever spent in his life. We sincerely hope that there will not be a called session, but of course no one knows just what the Governor will do about the matter.

THE CAUSE OF CRIME

By Bruce Catton

No more pictures dealing with the underworld will be produced by the Paramount-Publix Corporation. S. R. Kent, vice president in charge of distribution, made this announcement the other day—taking pains, at the same time, to deny emphatically that gangster movies have been responsible for crime waves.

This action came only a few days after Police Commissioner Mulrooney of New York had charged that motion pictures and tabloid newspapers were chiefly responsible for the increase of crime among city youths.

Mr. Kent, explaining his company's action, said simply that crime pictures have been overdone and that the public is tired of them. Thus, while he does not accept Commissioner Mulrooney's criticism, he at least takes an action that ought to help make the commissioner happy.

The general public probably will welcome a diminution in the number of gangster movies. The general public also is at least partially in agreement with the New York police commissioner; and the whole business needs a little more intelligent consideration than it usually gets.

An impressionable youngster may, now and then, be led into crime by a lurid movie; but in general it is safe to say that blaming the movies for the gang wars of the big cities is nothing but an easy way out of a preplexing situation.

As long as we can soothe our conscience by an "explanation" of that kind we shall continue to have crime waves. Indeed, one of the big reasons for bad crime conditions in American cities is the fact that all of us are content to find some obvious scapegoat like the moving picture.

We blame the movie and the tabloid and conveniently forget about the bad housing conditions that provide crime and provide crime with its best spawning ground.

We blame the movie and the tabloid and overlook the fact that half a dozen good playgrounds, properly placed and rightly directed, would do more good to keep children from going astray than all the "uplift" in the world.

We blame the movies and the tabloid and shut our eyes to the fact that every one of us who buys a pint of gin helps to pay for the upkeep of the army of professional gunmen.

We overlook the social and economic conditions that produce big city gangs—because fixing those conditions so that they would no longer produce gangs would be altogether too much trouble. Being lazy, we prefer to put up with the gangs. Why not blame them on the movies and the newspapers? It's so much easier.

It's just about time that we gave up these cheap excuses. The roots of organized crime today go right to the foundations of American society. Cheap movies have no more to do with it than the price of bustles in Afghanistan.

In Search of Londom

(By L. A. Osgood)

Part II.

Frank Green advises that perhaps the best place to commence a walk through Cheapside is from St. Paul's Churchyard. How glad we are to have known this when we reach the Tower, for on our walk we have visited some of the most fascinating spots in all London and at each point lived over again the glorious past of "Old London."

Cheapside (from the Saxon word "chepe," meaning market) runs east and west, right through the heart of the city. Mary Curtis tells us that "the eastern end of Cheapside is called the Poultry. The street has kept this homely name ever since the days when the farmers had their market for geese and chickens in this place. The neighboring Scalding Alley owes its name to the habit, in early times, of scalding chickens there, which were sold in the market of the Poultry."

Coming out of the musty Churchyard of St. Paul's, we turned northward to the beginning of Old Cheapside, the street wherein was the Great Conduit, "the fountain where the people of London came to get their water in the days before water was piped to anybody's house." Here where Aldersgate Street (named for the 'Alders Gate,' "where in early times the alder trees grew thickly, and where what is now a crowded part of the city was then more or less wooded country"), Newgate Street, and Cheapside intersect, we gain some idea of Greater London's traffic. Courteous, helmeted "bobbies," with white canvas half-sleeves drawn up over the forearms of their blue coats, patiently guide the jam of moving vehicles or give advice to bewildered Americans seeking their way about a city with which it is truly easier to become acquainted than it is with San Francisco or New York.

Why the white canvas sleeves of the forearms of the city policemen? Because, according to English theory, the motorist might, in the confusion of things, miss the movement of the dull-coated arm of the traffic officer, whereas the glaring white arm in its signal-swing is sure to attract his attention and guarantee his correct reading of the instruction given. Oh, these English are thorough in all they do!

Alfred Noyes opens his delightful "Tales of the Mermaid Tavern" with a vivid description of his approach to Cheapside, which description may well serve us here in our endeavor to visualize the traffic at this particular point of thoroughfare intersection. He says:

"Under the foggy sunset London glowed,
Like one huge cob-webbed flagon of old wine.
And, as I walked down Fleet Street, the soft sky
Flowed through the roaring thoroughfares, transfused
Their sharp outlines, blurred the throngs of black
On either pavement, blurred the rolling stream
Of red and yellow busses, till the town
Turned to a golden suburb of the clouds.
And, round the mighty bubble of St. Paul's,
Over the up-turned faces of the street,
An air-ship slowly sailed, with whirring fans,
A voyager in the new-found realms of gold."

Here where Cheapside begins its eastward slant the "bobbies" stand all day; and, as if to cheer them with the benediction of its presence, here stands also "a statue of the famous statesman—Sir Robert Peel — who introduced the police spstem to London.

And hereabouts we find the site of the Mermaid Tavern. What are the lines of Noyes? They run something like this:

And, suddenly, as a song that wholly escapes
Remembrance, at one note, wholly returns,
There, as I knocked, memory returned to me.
I knew it all—the little twisted street,
The rough wet cobbles gleaming, far away,
Like opals, where it ended on the sky;
And, overhead, the darkly smiling face
Of that old wizard inn; I knew by rote
The smooth sun-bubbles in the worn green paint
Upon the doors and shutters . . .

We are in Cheapside—the Cheapside of yester-year, and with Alfred Noyes we are at the Mermaid's door. Forgotten is the white-armed bobby, forgotten are the modern pavements splotched with red and yellow omnibusses. Hearing not the multitudinous cries of the city, we slip out of today into yesterday and find ourselves before the most famous tavern of "Old London."

And through the dream,
Even as I stood and listened, came a sound
Of clashing wine-cups: then a deep-voiced song
Made the old timbers of the Mermaid Inn
Shake as a galleon shakes in a gale of wind
When she rolls glorying through the Ocean-sea.

And there, framed in the lilac patch of sky
That ended the steep street, dark on its light,
And standing on those cobble-stones
Just where they took the sunset's kiss, I saw
A figure like foot-feathered Mercury,
Tall, straight and splendid as a sunset-cloud,
Clad in a crimson doublet and trunk-hose,
A rapier at his side; and, as he paused,
His long fantastic shadow swayed and swept Against my feet.

A moment he looked back,
Then swaggered down as if he owned a world
Which had forgotten—did I wake or dream?—
Even his glorious ghost!

Over his arm
He swung a gorgeous murrey-coloured cloak
Of Ciprus velvet, caked and smeared with mud
As on the day when—did I dream or wake?
And had not all this happened once before?—
When he had laid that cloak before the feet
Of Gloriana! By that mud-stained cloak
'Twas he! Our Ocean-Shepherd! Walter Raleigh!
He brushed me passing, and with one vigorous thrust
Opened the door and entered. At his heels
I followed—into the Mermaid!—through three yards
Of pitch-black gloom, then into an old inn-parlour
Swimming with faces in a mist of smoke
That up-curled, blue, from long Winchester pipes,
While—like some rare old picture, in a dream
Recalled—quietly listening, laughing, watching,
Pale on that old black oaken wainscot floated
One bearded oval face, young, with deep eyes,
Whom Raleigh hailed as "Will!"

Between Friday Street (so called because in the old days the fishmongers peddled their wares there on the sixth day of the week) and Bread Street (wherein the staff of life was sold) the tavern stood, a glamorous hotel when William Shakespeare (the world's greatest master of the craft of letters) foregathered—in the reign of red-haired Elizabeth—with the wits of his day. What a company they must have been! Sir Walter Raleigh, Kit Marlowe, Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, my Earl of Leicester! Names to conjure with! What high conversation must have rolled beneath those soot-blackened rafters! What poetry those crudely plastered walls must have hearkened to! Ah, the shouts and laughter of those rare gentlemen! No Eighteenth Century coffee house ever kept such a roster of famous guests as that tavern beneath the sign of the mermaid.

In Bread Street—the street in which Sir Thomas More was born—stood another house of peculiar interest to him who searches through the Past. It was the abiding place of a certain pious scrivener and was called the "Spread Eagle," after the family crest. And in it, according to the custom of the time, the pious scrivener maintained his place of business.

Before the door of that low-ceilinged shop the honest scrivener's little son played, all unmindful of the tremendous destiny that should be his in justifying the ways of God to man. Doubtless that small boy often witnessed the passing of those glittering members of that famous Mermaid company as they went to and from the long-since vanished London Bridge over which they paced their stately way between the hut-crowned Globe on the vicious Bankside and the green-doored tavern in loved Cheapside.

No great distance away there is to be seen—on a business house at the corner of Watling Street — a tablet, marking the site of All Hallows Church wherein little John, son of Scrivener Milton, was most solemnly christened. Near at hand, too, is the site of St. Paul's School, in which Master Milton is known to have been a precocious scholar. One metrical exercise of young John's, an excellent paraphrase of Psalm CXXXVI, survives. It runs—

Let us with a gladsome mind
Praise the Lord, for He is kind;
For His mercies aye endure
Ever faithful, ever sure.

The school has been removed to Hammersmith, but a tablet on a business block marks the former site.

We owe much to British thoughtfulness in placing these tablets for us. Without them we should never be able to find out much of "Old London" and dream our dreams of the days that are gone. Without these markers we would in truth fulfill the prophecy of Balderston's strange Peter Standish when, as a twentieth century intruder among the elegant folk of the days of Reynolds and the Duchess of Devonshire, he exclaimed to them for pulling down "some houses built in the dark ages," "How the Future will curse you!"

But, to return to our haunting of quaint Cheapside. There is much to see in the immediate neighborhood of St. Paul's if time and inclination permit. Three or four blocks from the site of the scrivener's shop is Saint Giles Cripplegate, one of the eight churches to escape the Great Fire of 1666. On approaching the ancient pile, one notices that the Churchyard is higher than the base of the Church. "This raising of the level of the Churchyard," we are told, "was caused by the great number of burials during the Plague year."

Many celebrities are buried or commemorated in this hoary church. Near the entrance is a monument to John Foxe, author of the "book of Martyrs." Fox at one time was a tutor in the house of Will Shakespeare's persecutor, Sir Thomas Lucy. And, by odd coincidence, there is in this same church, a monument to Constance Whitney, grand-daughter of this same Lucy. A strange thing is this monument, representing as it does shroud-enveloped figure rising from a coffin. Another interesting monument is that set up to Sir Martin Forbisher, who commanded the "Triumph" in that memorable sea fight with the Spanish Armada. In the center of this monument is a beautifully carved model of an Elizabethan ship.

At the end of the nave of Saint Giles Cripplegate one comes upon a stone slab laid in the floor. Here a reverent pause is made. There is a bit of an ache in the throat of him who looks down upon that stone worn by the passing tread of many feet, if happily he is sentimental in the presence of such tombs, for here beside his honest scrivener father lies the body of the noble man who sacrificed his eyesight on the altar of English patriotism.

Yet I argue not
Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer
Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied
In Liberty's defense, my noble task,
Of which all Europe rings from side to side.

A few blocks more and one comes upon John Wesley's house and his chapel and his grave. One may enter the chapel and ascend the pulpit where the reformer Wesley stood and delivered his long-to-be-remembered sermons.

Near at hand in Bunhill Fields, the Noncomformist cemetery in which are buried the bodies of John Bunyan, "and Daniel Defoe, and Isaac Watts, and William Blake, and Susannah Wesley, the mother of John and Charles." Originally the place was called "Bone Hill Fields"; but the English tendency to a slovenly pronunciation of names, has robbed the original of its gruesome connotation.

In Saint Giles Cripplegate and facing the entrance door of the church is a fine monument of Milton, a delicately wrought bust with reliefs representing the Fall and Expulsion from Paradise. Here in Bunhill Fields one is vividly reminded of the Milton monument, for in the Nonconformist burial plot has been set one of a similar nature to commemorate John Bunyan. On the top of it is the figure of the Bedford tinker, and on the sides are two bas reliefs depicting Christian bending under his burden and his release at the foot of the Cross. Not all of England's mighty dead lie interred in proud Westminster.

Westward a short distance is the Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, a church regarded as being the oldest parochial church now standing in London. Before this sacred edifice many a conscientious, God-fearing Englishman endured martyrdom. Numerous spectacles supplied by these heroic souls to gaping London mobs are described by Foxe in his well-known book. One such martrydom occurs to us as we visit the spot—the burning of Anne Askew.

Suppose we let Foxe himself tell the story of this brave soul who elected to perish in the flames rather than recant her dissention from the doctrine of trans-substantiation:

"The day of her execution being appointed, she was brought into Smithfield in a chair, because she could not go on her feet, by means of her great torments. When she was brought to the stake, she was tied in the middle with a chain that held her body. When all things were thus prepared to the fire, Dr. Shaxton, who was then appointed to preach, began his sermon. Anne Askew, hearing and answering again unto him, where he said well, confirmed the same; where he said amiss, there, said she, he misseth and speaketh without the book.

"The sermon being finished, the other martyrs (three men) standing there tied to three several stakes, ready to their martyrdom, began their prayers. The multitude and concourse were exceeding, the place where they stood being railed about to keep out the press. Upon the bench, under Saint Bartholomew's Church, sat Wrisely (Wriothesley), Chancellor of England, the old Duke of Norfolk, the Lord Mayor, with divers more. Before the fire should be set unto them, one of the bench hearing that they had gunpowder about them and being afraid the faggots by strength of the gunpowder would come flying about their ears, began to be afraid; but the Earl of Bedford, declaring to him that gunpowder was not laid under the faggots, but only about their bodies to rid them out of their pain, so diminished their fear.

"Then Wrisely, Lord Chancellor, sent to Anne Askew letters, offering to her the king's pardon, if she would recant. . . . Who, refusing once to look upon them, made this answer again: That she came not thither to deny her Lord and Master. . . . Whereupon the Lord Mayor, commanding fire to be put to them, cried with a loud voice, 'Fiat justitia.'

And thus the good Anne Askew, having now ended the long course of her agonies, being encompassed in with flames of fire, as a blessed sacrifice unto God, she slept in the Lord, anno 1546, leaving behind her a singular example for all men to follow."

A great fair was held annually here at Saint Bartholomew's. Originally maintained for but three days during the season of pilgrimage, it was later expanded to a period of fourteen days. In the beginning this fair was granted to the clothiers of England as a market for the exchange of cloth; but as the centuries passed, it became a raucous medley of carnival sounds, the stately procession of worthy cloth merchants giving place to the jostling of horse dealers, ballad-mongers, puppeteers, freaks, quacks, and sneak thieves. Good old Ben Jonson paints this fair upon a wide canvas in his comedy, "Bartholomew Fair," spreading the vivid colors with broad strokes and the deft sureness of an artist.

In St. Bartholomew's Close, south of the Church, Milton sought refuge when the Stuarts returned to sit yet once again upon the throne of England. Laughlin tells us that "there is a story that Milton's friends got up a mock funeral for him, so Charles would not have him hunted out and executed: and that when Charles heard about this, afterwards, he laughed heartily." That may or may not be a true yarn. However, the blind poet did pass the last years of his life close to the spot, and, as we have seen, was buried not far away.

One has given us an interesting picture of the Milton of these latter days:

"After its ('Paradise Lost') publication, visitors of all ranks began wending their way toward Bunhill Fields, where, perhaps, they encountered the slender figure of the blind poet being led about the streets. He was under medium height, feeble-looking, and fair-skinned. Sometimes they found him sitting in the door of his house, if the weather permitted, wearing a gray coarse cloth coat over his black suit. His hands were gouty and gnarled with chalky deposits.

"With strange visitors he was affable, with just a shade of stateliness. With familiars, especially at his table, he was the life and soul of the party, with a marked tendency to the satirical and sarcastic in his comments on men and things.

"He was very temperate in his drinking and eating. He had ceased to attend any church, and had no religious observance in his family, but was profoundly religious in mind."

Many other famous names are associated with this locality, among them that of Benjamin Franklin, who for a time worked here as printer. Did space permit, we should linger with them all. We wished when there that like Peter Standish we might develop what Henry James has called a "sense of the past" in order to project ourselves backward through the years to those days of high adventure and mighty living and resplendent romance. But, had such a gift been ours, we might, like this same Peter Standish, have found cause to regret the weird transition. Who knows?

We were in the year of grace, 1931, and although we were seeking out "Old London," we had perforce to re-live the Past only in vision, illuminating the pages of history and the pages of creative effort with the magic glow of imagination.

And so, continuing on our way eastward, we came to Wood Street, so named because the greater portion of the houses that once lined its sides were constructed of wood. "At the corner of Wood Street" we paused. Again there was a tightening of throat muscles, and a not-forbidden tear dimmed the lash, for at last we realized a long-cherished desire to look upon the flourishing plane tree (sycamore) of Wordsworth' poem on Poor Susan.

How old is that lordly tree? How old was it when Wordsworth looked first upon it? It was in 1797 that the poem was written—one hundred thirty-four years ago. We know not how many years have gone over the head of that majestic tree, yet it has steadfastly survived. The deadening smoke that be-grimes everything in London can do the plane tree no permanent injury, for each year it sheds its bark and buckles on, figuratively speaking, a new armor in which to battle its assailants. And long may it live and flourish to the edification of those who love the austere bard of Grasmere!

A poor charwoman, Susan had through the night been scrubbing office floors in the mercantile houses of Cheapside. At dawn she ceased her back-breaking, knee-grinding labor and took her way wearily toward her lowly habitation. Cheapside with all its drabness held no allurement for her—not until this particular morning. Susan, as a beautiful girl had roamed the moors of glorious Devon perhaps, or had idly wandered through the shady glades of leafy Warwickshire. In those far-removed days of simple happiness, she had deeply loved her native countryside; but she had become obsessed of dreams which danced—Fata Borgana-like—before her unsophisticated eyes and led her to London Tower. There the witch-light had deserted her, and Susan had awakened to the harsh realities of city life. The years flowed over her and always scrubbing was her lot. Forever and forever, with a montonous endlessness, it was London, London, London, with no escape. There was no return to the meadows of Warwickshire or the lovely lanes of Devon. Fading was the memory of girlhood's carefree days. And then one morning she heard the note of the thrush, heard it in the heart of London. . .

Whimsically the breeze dipped down and ruffled its playful path through the tremulous leaves of the plane tree. Our ears caught the chirp of an unseen bird. Strangely moved, we chanted—ever so softly—Wordsworth wistful lines describing the reverie of the charwoman.

At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears,
Hangs a thrush that sings loud, it has sung for three years:
Poor Susan has passed by the spot, and has heard
In the silence of morning the song of the Bird.

'Tis a note of enchantment; what ails her? She sees
A mountain ascending, a vision of trees;
Bright volumes of vapour through Lothbury glide,
And a river flows on through the vale of Cheapside.

Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale,
Down which she so often has tripped with her pail;
And a single small cottage, a nest like a dove's,
The one only dwelling on earth that she loves.

She looks, and her heart is in heaven: but they fade,
The mist and the river, the hill and the shade:
The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
And the colours have all passed away from her eyes.

Having stood "at the corner of Wood Street" and having looked upon our romantic sycamore and having recalled that the charming lyrist, Robert Herrick, first saw the light of day in Wood Street and that Charles Dickens' "Pip"—in "Great Expectations"—lodged in this same street, we turned reluctantly and resumed our pilgrimage eastward along the soot-painted highway that in its days of forgotten glory flaunted banners of scarlet and gold and echoed to the clarion notes of silver trumpets.

On every hand there was the temptation to loiter, but we kept to our purpose and followed the path of gracious Anne Boleyn through Cornhill, through Gracechurch Street, and along Great Tower Street to the most ancient fortress in all "merrie" England—the Tower of London.

MR. JIM REEVES,
Canyon, Texas.

Dear Mr. Reeves:

I am taking this rather unusual method of writing you a letter.

Our dealer tells me that you expect to raise quite a number of baby chicks again this year. You naturally want to to raise as many of them to profitable maturity as possible. The Nutrena Feed Mills, Inc., wants to help you do this. We cannot supply the good care and management we know you will give them, but for years we have specialized in the manufacture of the safest and most nutritious chick starter that can be made.

I am proud of Nutrena because I know how carefully it is made—what splendid results it has given thousands of poultry raisers all over the country. Nutrena is sacked in the Golden Bag.

This year Nutrena has been made better than ever, yet is selling at a lower price than any time in history. Milk Sugar Feed, the new dried milk which is a control for coccidiosis and a new form of Vitamin D has been added. Only two handfuls needed to safely feed each one of your baby chicks for the first three weeks.

Broilers or eggs will either provide cash returns this year as before or save grocery and butcher bills, maybe both. Baby chicks started on Nutrena will always make you a profit. I hope you use it and tell your friends about it. If you want Judge Branch's Poultry Booklet this year, I'll see that you get it. It contains many valuable hints in chick raising.

Sincerely yours,

Le Mirage of 1931 Is an Outstanding College Yearbook

The 1931 edition of Le Mirage, the yearbook of the West Texas State Teachers College was received at the college early this week and is being distributed among the students.

The present volume of the yearbook has been described as "an unusually good one." It is edited by Miss Margaret Sheers, Amarillo, and managed by Wallace O'Keefe.

The book is featured with historical sketches pertaining to the early history of the Panhandle country when it was an open cow range. With the assistance of Miss Estelle Bourland, Canyon, who did the art work, Miss Sheers has developed an interesting book, not only of the college life, but of historical interest to all the Panhandle. Models for the drawings in the book are those used from the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum.

At the opening of the book is a sketch of the old XIT Ranch headquarters at Channing. The index page is marked by a picture of the ranch house at the Rita Blanca division of the same ranch. Another sketch on the title page shows the oldest school building in this section, located at Mobeetie, in contrast to, the proposed Museum building to be erected by the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society.

The dedication page features a sketch of the old T-Anchor Ranch headquarters, located a mile and a half north of the college and which is situated on the land owned by the college farm. This is the oldest ranch house in this district.

The main division pages in the order in which they appear in the book, represent with sketches in four colors the seven steps in the development of the Panhandle country. These steps begin with Coronado's expedition, about 1540, in search of the cities of gold. Next in order is the period in which the Indians were the undisputed lords of the prairies, and after that the time when the Mexican traders and huiters began in their crude ox-carts the trade with the people of this section, which trade has grown to vast proportions. The fourth, and one of the most important steps, was the coming of the Texas longhorn cattle and the cowboy. Their advent had the widest and most lasting influence. The cowboys, as early pioneers, brought in their wake the nester, or as pictured in Le Mirage, the "man with the plow," who began the tilling of this fertile land, marking the fifth step in its rapid advancement. The coming of the first railroad to this part of the country, in the early forties, was the sixth step, bringing with it steel and associated industries. The last step, evidence of the greatest advancement of them all, is the representation of the Panhandle as an intellectual and educational center. It is typified in Le Mirage by a beautiful sketch of the Administration Building of the college.

The sub-division pages consist of sketches from original objects in the museum. Some of the relics which were used in making these pictures were an old saddle made by Colonel Charles Goodnight, which was the first saddle in this section.

Miss Kathryn Cheyne has as her guest this week, Miss Ester Clark of Strawn, Texas.

Summer Party Dresses Favor Lace

YOU'RE IN STYLE IF YOU WEAR WHITE OR BEIGE LACE OVER VARIED COLORED SLIPS—NEW CREATIONS EMPHASIZE STRAIGHT LINES

BY HARRIET

EVERYBODY needs a new party dress when summer arrives.

There is something about warm days that encourages carelessness in dress, carelessness in carriage.

Just step out and get yourself a new dress and see what a stimulant it is! You'll find yourself manicuring your nails, fixing your hair a new way, rearranging the house and even making strawberry shortcage for supper without anyone asking you to.

But your summer party dress should be both party and summer. Shed heavy things and heavy ideas. Go in for lace, net, organdie, chiffon. Soft colors, feminine lines.

Lace is an excellent bet. This year especially. There is a vogue right now for getting either white or beige lace frocks and wearing them over different colored slips. One a beige, one green, blue, pink or whatever tone you like.

This vogue changes the entire outlook of the summer party frock. It can go to many different parties and look different for each one. If you are handy with the coloring business, the same slip will do in several colors by dipping it each time in a different shade.

One of the most satisfactory types of lace frock is shown here, a simple design that still has all the chic in the world and is most wearable.

THERE is a bloused back bodice which is cut almost to shoulder line and the front neck is just modestly rounded.

The skirt has a front peplum which starts low on one side, rises and reaches the waistline at the other side, to jut down to a deep point in the back. It is cut the new ankle length, which is preferred by many women to the floor length for evening.

For a very demure summer party frock, a white marquisite dress of great simplicity can't be beat.

It is cut with great fullness, pleated from the waist to below the third skirt ruffle which is posed on top of the pleats. These three ruffles make the frock, but don't try to wear them unless you are really fairly slender.

The bodice is very sweet.. It has a pleated ruffle all around the walst, which is modest in front and cut somewhat lower in the back. No sash, no belt, no girdle. Just a fine finish where the skirt joins the waist at a high waistline.

Stressing straight line silhouettes, these new creations are typical of the party frocks to be worn this summer. The beige lace dress, left, has a distinctive front peplum which juts down to a deep point in the back. A creation of great simplicity and elegance is the white marquisite, right. Notice its three skirt ruffles.

Both of these dresses show the new flair for straight line silhouettes. Both are cut amply full, but fall so that the general effect is straight.

This is a forerunner to the later summer things which promise to have less obvious curves to them.

Another thing that is wrong with the country is that too much of it has moved to the cities.

The only time it doesn't pay to advertise is when you advertise your own ignorance.

Even a rich man is willing to admit that he is poor when the tax assessor comes around.

Most people can tell a joke and raise a laugh these days. People are becoming more courteous.

NOTICE OF CORRECTION

The News wishes to correct an error which occurred in last weeks' issue. APPRECIATES ORATORIO

To The News:

I wish to express my very great appreciation of the excellent work done by both soloists and chorus in the presentation of the oratorio "Elijah" at the college auditorium Monday evening. The support of the orchestra, too, was fine.

The people of Canyon who failed to attend missed one of the greatest attractions which has ever been offered in this city and showed a deplorable lack of real culture, excepting those, of course, who from circumstances could not be there.

Yours,
(Signed) W. B. Parsons.

"MEN WORKING"

Roads are being paved, repaired, widened or improved this spring in most any direction a motorist may drive. This work is an essential part of the nation's development, and it is on an even greater scale than usual this year because of the desire of the government and individual states to give employment to those unable to find other kinds of work. It is amovement in which motorists should co-operate in every possible way.

With this in mind it is going to be necessary for the motorist who travels in strange territory to watch carefully for the sign "Men Working" that is customarily displayed where a road crew is laboring. Often a careless motorist hits and ruins an expensive instrument, or wrecks the signs intended to protect the workmen. In fact, there have been instances in which the motorist, disregarding the signs in their mania for speed, have actually killed workmen engaged in highway construction.

Some motorists seem to take delight in running over the signs when the workmen are not in sight. Others get athrill out of making the men jump for safety. Still others remove obstacles guarding the unfinished work. This should not be. "Men Working" ought to be a welcome sign to everybody just now, and one commanding more respect than ever before, since work is the one thing that our national prosperity now depends upon. In common courtesy an ddecency, respect the "Men Working" signs.

It has been our observation that the man who borrows trouble always pays it back with a high rate of interest.

Every motorist will do well to remember in driving that if he isn't right in traffic he'll be left in a hospital.

It's our guess that most any dog would rather be treated as a dog rather than to be used as a substitute for a baby.

One reason why men do not put aside temptation like they put aside money is that temptation doesn't pay any interest.

One thing impossible to find anywhere is a man who can make a bed to satisfy his wife's idea of how it should be made.

Money may not mean everything, but it's hard nowadays to find anything that doesn't mean money.

Was A Cold-Hot Period

It will in all probability be hot as blazes when you receive your gas bill June 1st. But don't forget that the above period was a cold-hot one.

There's an old saying, "Only strangers predict weather," and it was certainly proven during this period. It was cold one day and hot the next, and several times it was cold and hot in the same day. During the period, most cities had their official straw hat days. Then a couple of days later those courageous souls who had purchased new straws were digging out the old felt hat, because it was so chilly that straw hats looked silly. According to official weather records, there was 2½ times more heating weather this period than in the same period a year ago. And that means 2½ times more gas consumed. So remember that this period was a cold-hot (mostly cold) one.

WEST TEXAS GAS CO.

THE FUTURE OF WHEAT

The Santa Fe is expecting a land office business when the combines start harvesting grain in Western Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas, and, according to statistics prepared by the federal department of agriculture, prospects for a reduction in the wheat output are not so good, except in the Middle West and Northwest. There occupants of marginal grain lands farmed for a considerable period of years are finding it hard to make a profit with wheat at 60 cents a bushel.

All leaders of economic thought in agricultural circles today stress acreage reduction as the only permanent solution of the wheat problem. It is not a new idea, of course, it has been harped on for years, and friendly warnings have fallen upon deaf ears in the grain belt of the United States. John A. Simpson of Oklahoma, president of the National Farmers Union, is the latest to urge a cut in acreage. Returning from Europe, he stresses the importance of co-operative acreage pooling and co-operative farm marketing as the "twin champions of the farmer against the corporation farm."

Needless to say, the low price of wheat is going to make the growth of that crop unprofitable to a large proportion of the farmers in the Middle West who have been raising it for a generation or two. Out in the Panhandle and contiguous areas, official and co-operative measures to reduce acreage will not be so strong. The Texas grain grower can make a living with 60-cent wheat; at least he can come closer to it than the grain growers of the Dakotas.

In the near future wheat growing may be concentrated in the high plateau land of West Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas unless the price goes up. It is unfortunate that the prosperity of West Texas may seem to be dependent on the adversity of another section of the country, but the inexorable laws of supply and demand work that way. Until the United States raises just enough wheat for internal consumption, the price of that grain will be too low for profit in most sections of the country.

If a series of years in which the wheat farmer reaps lean profits is immediately in the offing, the development may be a blessing in disguise for Texas, since the grain growers of the Northwest will disgustedly turn to other crops and allow the Southwest a virtual monopoly. Prospects for increased crops in Russia, Australia and the Argentine make it almost imperative that the American acreage be cut so as to produce merely enough for home consumption. Since the Southwest grows wheat more economically, that section will continue to raise the normal crop. —The Houston Chronicle.

A TIMELY WARNING

Newspapers over the Panhandle are beginning to sound warnings against the horde of men and women who annually peddle their wares through the prosperous sections of the nation. They peddle for cash and if the merchandise should happen not to be satisfactory the customer has no recourse —the seller is gone. He is the well-known fly-by-night salesman.

Reports of the impending bumper wheat crop in the Panhandle are bringing more and more of this class of salesmen to the North Panhandle territory. When tempted by low prices and shimmery merchandise by the itinerant peddler remember that in the long run you are paying high. That man or woman leaves nothing in your city. He pays no taxes, contributes nothing to your organizations that are building your city and making it a better, more prosperous place for you to live, and he pays nothing toward your churches and schools that make Dalhart worth living in.

When all these factors are considered the merchandise is merely cheap—it is not economical. Nor is it good judgment to buy it. The man who purchases from that type of salesman is not helping his own best interests.—Dalhart Texan.

National Educator Addressed College Students Last Week

"Don't take your diplomas too seriously," was the advice given Friday morning to the seniors of the West Texas State Teachers College by Dr. Ambrose L. Suhrie, Teachers College and Normal School education specialist, of New York University, in an address to over a thousand students and faculty members.

Dr. Suhrie warned the young teachers that diploma alone provides neither an education nor the ability to be a good teacher. "You will not be a great teacher until you are as willing to learn as to teach," said Dr. Suhrie. "You ought not to be willing to accept a diploma until you have learned to co-operate with one another, and until you are willing to co-operate with children as with your superintendent and fellow teachers. You will never be effective as a counsellor until you are agreeable as a companion."

Dr. Suhrie, one of the leading educators in this country in the teacher training branch of the work, arrived in Canyon Thursday night. He has been granting conferences to faculty members and students who wish his help. He plans a visit to New Mexico and Arizona. When he visits these states, there will be only two states in the forty-eight in which he has not visited teachers colleges and normal schools and spoken to the students and faculty in their own auditorium.

"Every year I work with Teachers Colleges, I come to have a higher opinion of the service they are rendering the country," said the educator, "I have never yet seen a group of students in a normal school or teachers college who did not take their opportunities seriously. Public supported teachers colleges are characterized by a spirit of industry, and a spirit of friendliness, and a spirit of co-operation."

The old idea of teaching, according to Dr. Suhrie, is "I spend my time thinking up disagreeable tasks for you to do and you spend your time getting out of doing as many of them as possible." The new idea, he says, should be "I can be of assistance to you only if I work with you and for you, and you can be a good student by profiting by my longer training and experience and coming to me for assistance."

In conclusion Dr. Suhrie said: "If the school is not a co-operative enterprise, it isn't a success. A good school is a place where young people of any age come together to educate themselves and each other with the help of good teachers, where teacher and students and comrades and companions in the great art of learning."

The good old days were those when young people lived at home, even before they were married.

Paved Feed Lot Pays the Cattle Farmer $7 per Head

Profits averaging $7 per head each year are being realized by the farmer who fattens his cattle on a paved lot, says Prof. R. R. Snapp of the University of Illinois.

An increase of $2.50 in the value of each steer is not the only profit feature on a concrete feed lot. The hogs that follow the cattle onto the lot salvage more gain on an average of $2 per head of cattle fed. In addition labor costs are reduced $1 per head and the saving in manure is $1.50 per head. These savings total $7 per head.

At the rate of $7 per head the average sized herd of 40 to 80 beef cattle pays from $280 to $560 more profits each year when fed on concrete paved lots. This means that the initial cost of paving often is returned the first year or two and that thereafter the paved feed lot becomes an investment yielding 100 per cent dividends.

For a paved feed lot that will last indefinitely, we recommend Dewey portland cement.

Burton Named On Staff Tech Coaching School

Two of the most outstanding basketball coaches in the Southwest have been added to the Wade-Phelan coaching school to be held at the Texas Technological College, Lubbock, August 3 to 15, Pete Cawthorn, head of the athletic department has announced.

S. D. Burton, coach of the West Texas State Teachers College at Canyon and Jimmy Kitts of the Athens High School have both been secured to give instructions during the two weeks school for Southwest coaches.

Burton's teams for the past two years have averaged better than a point a minute in scoring. In nine years at Canyon, Burton has won five championships of the T. I. A. A. conference and has never placed lower than third. Out of 211 games he has won 178.

Kitts has made an equal record in high school basketball. His Athens quintets have won the national championship for high school basketball two years, won the Texas high school championship in 1927, 1930, and 1931, and won the A. A. U. in 1928.

The coaching school is the only one to be held in the Southwest this summer, and an unusually large attendance is expected. The annual coaching school at S. M. U. will not be held this year and officials of that school have endorsed the school at Tech and are helping advertise it.

Inquiries about the school are coming in from Pennsylvania, Indiana, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas, Texas, and other states in response to 2,000 letters that have been sent to coaches all over the nation by officials of the Texas Technological College.

Football work at the school will be handed by Wallace Wade and Jimmy Phelan.

Wade, now of Duke University and formerly of the University of Alabama, coached the "Crimson Tide of 'Bama'" to three Southern Conference championships at the University of Alabama, tying Pop Warner's Cardinals in 126.

Phelan, now of the University of Washington, formerly of Purdue University, famous Notre Dame quarterback under Rockne applied the Rockne system at Purdue to win the Big Six championship in 1929 then skipped to the West Coast, introduced the Rockne system and made it click the first year, 1930.

Nations Talk Peace But Are Preparing For Another War

The nations of the earth are talking peace, international peace, but at the same time making mad haste toward another world war, was the conclusion reached Tuesday by L. F. Sheffy in a talk on international relationship at the weekly luncheon of the Rotary Club. The League of Nations and the World Court are increasing in prominence in their efforts, and are becoming greater powers in world affairs, and the hope was expressed by the speaker that they would finally succeed in their endeavor for world peace. The Rotary Club and other bodies are making a great effort toward world peace, and will greatly assist in crystalizing sentiment.

Mr. Sheffy pointed out the fact that Woodrow Wilson hoped that the last war would be a war to end war, and would consent to no other kind of peace than one that would make peace plans more secure thru the League of Nations and the World Court. Yet the nations of today are making every effort toward arrmament for another war. Of the two forces at work, one for peace and one for war, the latter seems at this time to be gaining more strength.

Mr. Sheffy discussed the disarmament conferences of the past, and the prospects for the one to be held in February. He pointed out the fact that students of international relations predicted that another war would start in Europe within three years, and that the United States must be drawn into it. If another war comes, it will be the most destructive the world has ever seen; the nations will be bankrupt and civilization destroyed.

John W. Shanklin was introduced as a new member of the club.

Visitors and guests were: C. O. Hitchcock of Hutchinson, Kansas; Ed Enoch, Art Osgood and W. E. Bennett of Amarillo; Mrs. Irby Carruth and L. F. Sheffy of Canyon.

RISE OF A BARMAID

Some years ago Rachele Agostini was a comely barmaid in a modest Italian tavern. She had also been a worker in the fields, a shepherdess and a household servant.

While a barmaid, her employer warned her against her attachment for his son, saying: "Do not let yourself think of him. It would be better than you should die. Married to him you would have no happiness."

But Rachele had a will of her own and despite the warning of her prospective father-in-law she married his son. It has turned out that she might have done worse.

Once she secured the pardon of 300 anti-Fascist exiles through her influence with the dictator, Benito Mussolini. And how did this former barmaid obtain such sway over the master of all Italy?

One explanation is that she has tact and good judgment. Another is that she is his wife.

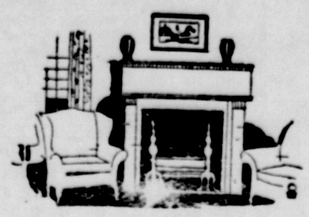
A "Homey" Place

is the kind of a home every woman wants. And what's a home without pictures?



PYRAGLASS PICTURES

are unbreakable and the colors do not fade.

PYRAGLASS PICTURES

'Welded on Wood"

are especially usable. They are in soft colors that harmonize readily with modern home furnishings.

Every woman who has seen them in our shop had admired their beauty. It's so easy to think of places to hang them, and people you would like to give them to.

We have a few very pretty scenes from the Palo Duro Canyons we think you will like. Many have admired "Christ at Twelve," "The Light of the World," and "John the Baptist" in their light and dark shade of brown.

The Harvester-Thresher Savings Investment Plan

MAKES IT EASY FOR YOU TO OWN A McCORMICK-DEERING HARVESTER-THRESHER

Under This New Plan Every Responsible Grain Grower Can Pay for His McCormick-Deering Out of a Part of the Savings His Combine Will Make

CROP production cost figures compiled by McCormick-Deering Harvester-Thresher users show savings in harvesting and threshing costs of 20 cents or more per bushel when compared with government average costs for farms with similar yields.

We are so confident that thousands of additional grain growers can make proportionate savings with a McCormick-Deering Harvester-Thresher that we are announcing the McCORMICK-DEERING HARVESTER-THRESHER SAVINGS INVESTMENT PLAN, under which you or any other responsible grain grower can purchase a combine now and meet the first payment after harvest with just a part of the savings made possible by the new machine—with two more years to pay the balance.

Keep in mind that under this plan you get a time-tried and time-tested combine backed by 18 years of field experience with harvester-threshers. It is sold to you by a well-established McCormick-Deering dealer in your own community, whose stocks and service are supplemented by this large, permanently established International Harvester branch house right here in your own section.

In McCormick-Deering dealers' stores the repair bins are well stocked with genuine IHC repair parts. Thousands of these dealers maintain completely equipped service stations, offering factory-standard service on McCormick-Deering Harvester-Threshers and Tractors and all International Harvester equipment. Additional service stations are being established as rapidly as they are justified by business in the community. As a direct result, McCormick-Deering service is better today than it was last year or 10 years ago; our resources and reputation are your guarantee that it will be still better when the harvester-thresher, tractor, or any other machine you buy today is 10 years old.

Consider well the value of this superior service before you select a harvester-thresher. You want to buy where you get the greatest value; not just the day you sign the order, but through every day and every year you rely on your purchase for cost-reducing performance at home and in your custom work. Consider, too, the advantage of being able to pay for your combine under the McCORMICK-DEERING HARVESTER-THRESHER SAVINGS INVESTMENT PLAN . . . making it doubly advantageous for you to buy your equipment where you can get the absolute assurance of good, quick, complete service which is offered you by this International Harvester branch and the McCormick-Deering dealer serving your community.

See the McCormick-Deering dealer for full details of the McCORMICK-DEERING HARVESTER-THRESHER SAVINGS INVESTMENT PLAN.

Creighton Admits

planned by Jim Thomas, who is now in the Nebraska penitentiary in connection with the robbery of the Hastings, Nebr., bank shortly following the Canyon robbery, in which the Thomas-Creighton gang was involved. Local officers had interviewed Thomas, but were unable to secure a confession from him owing to the fact that he is serving a 25-year sentence in Nebraska, and is liable for trial in Canyon on charge of robbery with firearms, which is a capital offense in Texas. Just what effect the statement of Creighton will have upon Thomas is yet to be determined, and whether or not Thomas will be returned here in August from the Nebraska penitentiary to face a trial on the charge of the robbery is yet to be decided upon by court officials.

Creighton described quite freely some of the details in connection with the robbery, but would not divulge the names of others who were connected with the job. He told of the cars used, and stated that the money was taken from Canyon to Amarillo. He was in splendid spirits all of the time, but expressed the opinion that they might soon hang him for the Webb City murder. He was arrested by mere chance for this murder, and stated that had he been sober at the time he would have cleaned up the bunch of officers, as he carried an automatic sawed-off shotgun, loaded with buckshot.

Mr. Black stated that officers from several states were in Joplin to question Creighton, as well as federal officers, as it is taken for granted that he was connected with a number of robberies in Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Nebraska and other states in the Southwest. It is stated that he was once connected with Danny Daniels, who was killed in leading the revolt in the Colorado penitentiary in October, 1929.

Commencement

has been the comment of people everywhere.

He continued, "Each generation can be a pioneer for those who follow, for there is always pioneering to be done. So long as people are hungry, there is pioneering to be done. So long as people vote dry and drink wet, there is pioneering to be done. So long as religious creeds cramp and restrict the development of life, so long as the world lasts, there will be work for men and women, those pioneering souls.

"The attempt to lay hyprocrisy aside and to look frankly into the problems of the day is the proper thing. We waste our time appealing to the public while we ought to be working."

The speaker cited a remark once made to him by the late Col. Chas. Goodnight, pioneer of the Panhandle. "If I were living in Hell under the rule of the Devil, I would support him with all my strength, or I'd get out," Col. Goodnight said with abruptness characteristic of his unusual character.

Britain Establishes University of the Air With Full-Time Training in Aviation

A UNIVERSITY OF THE AIR—a brand new idea conceived in very old England—threw open its doors to pupils recently at Hamble, near Southampton, and not far from London. Airmen of all nations and, in particular, officers serving in foreign air forces, anxious to take in full the system of training used by the far-famed Royal Air Force, were present.

That this University of the Air is staffed and directed by men who have been high up in the Royal Air Force, that it has the blessing of the air ministry, is a proof that England is not as afraid of a war-time invasion from the air as some of the British papers represent. Because if the air ministry were really so frightened, it would probably frown on any effort to teach foreigners how the Royal Air Force does things.

Sir John Higgins

First School of Its Kind

There are training schools for amateur military and commercial air men in the United States, England, France, Germany and Italy, but probably nothing before has ever been attempted which seeks to make of it a real University of the Air open to all.

For the time being, it has been incorporated as Air Training Service, Ltd., and is headed by Air Marshal Sir John Higgins, who until recently was air member for supply and research of the Air Council connected with the British air ministry.

He has chosen as his associate and as commander of the school, Group Captain R. J. F. Barton, who began flying in 1913, served all during the war and since then, save for a period with the British air ministry, was employed in commands connected with the training of army airmen. The chief instructor is Flight Lieutenant H. F. Jenkins, who joined the Royal Flying Corps in 1916, served during the war and then began the training of younger men.

Only recently he left the Central Flying School where for four years he had been an instructor on the staff. The rest of the teaching staff are likewise all ex-officers of the Royal Air Force, who for some years have been training R. A. F. reserve pilots at a school run by the British government.

The air university has 200 acres of level turf about five miles from Southampton. From this the land planes take off and descend. The land adjoins a fine stretch of Southampton water where seaplane training will be carried on.

Varied Instruction Given

Four types of land planes and three of sea planes have been purchased and will be used in practical demonstration work and actual flying. The pupil begins with instruction in a light airplane and proceeds to army cooperation craft and fighters. He gets full teaching in every branch of pilotage and navigation and many hours of instruction in engines, rigging, meteorology, airmanship and the theory of flight. A special course is also offered in "blind" flying and night flying.

Attendance at the University of the Air is by no means cheap. Pupils pay for their actual time in the air, the prices varying from $30 to $60 per hour for land planes, according to the type, and from $40 to $90 per hour for flying in sea planes. It is estimated that a total beginner, who wants to take elementary training, blind flying and advanced training, will need a total of 46½ hours in the air, which will cost him about $2170.

During their term at the university pupils are accommodated in permanent buildings. The mess, comprising dining rooms, billiard room, library and lounge, are run on regular air service lines. The charges for accommodation and messing are on a scale similar to those actually in use in the British Air Force.

Galbraith Makes Study of State's Financial Needs

H. W. Galbraith of Amarillo was in the city Tuesday looking after business. He expressed satisfaction that the legislature had adjourned, and hoped that another session would not be called as it was certain to pass more tax measures which would impose more burdens upon business and industry, which are now suffering from the depression.

Mr. Galbraith is a student of tax measures, and has made many valuable suggestions as to the solution of the problems confronting the state. He believes that the legislature should authorize a non-political board of business men to make a complete study of the tax problem, and make recommendations to the next regular session of the legislature the needs of state.

ART EXHIBIT AT COLLEGE OPEN TO PUBLIC THIS WEEK

The annual art exhibit of the work of the Art Department of the college was held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. All kinds of art work, drawings, pencil sketches, water color paintings, pen and ink drawings, cut flowers, charcoal drawings, design work, Indian designs, color charts, crayola drawings, etchings, and quick sketches were on display.

The exhibit was viewed by hundreds during the three days it was open to the public.

Creation of a legislative oil committee to work with like committees from other states.

Exempt marginal oil wells from proration.

Placing additional regulations on trucks and further restricting size and load limit, fixing maximum weight of load at 7,000 pounds. (Unsigned.)

Rev. B. F. Fronabarger left yesterday for Decatur, where he will deliver the commencement address of the high school Friday night.

NOTICE

The local office of the West Texas Gas Company will be closed all day Saturday, May 30, in observance of Memorial Day.

A BOY HERO HONORED

An unprecedented honor came to a 13-year-old Colorado schoolboy the other day when he was a guest at the White House by special invitation of President Hoover.

He slept in the blue bedroom, which has been occupied at different times by hundreds of distinguished guests, including Lindbergh. He also witnessed the official reception of the King and Queen of Siam, and the great State dinner given for them.

He dined with the President and his family, was shown about the White House grounds and the city of Washington, and received every attention due a real hero, such he has shown himself to be.

The boy is Bryan Untiedt, who for 36 hours fought to keep his 21 companions awake to prevent their freezing to death when a blizzard trapped them in a school bus near Towner, Colo., a few weeks ago. He shared his own clothing with them and suffered frozen hands and feet himself. In spite of his heroic efforts five died, including his own brother, but had it not been for his intelligence and great courage all might have perished before help reached them.

The full story of Bryan Untiedt's heroism is too long to relate here, but suffice it to say that no finer example of sheer grit and determination in the face of apparently hopeless odds has ever been displayed by anyone, old or young.

He richly deserves the recognition given him by the President and Mrs. Hoover, as well as the universal acclaim which his splendid heroism called forth.

Fort Dearborn Lives Again

Fort Dearborn, the outpost on the shores of Lake Michigan that grew into the city of Chicago, has been rebuilt in every detail a few miles from its original site. It will be one of the city's features as well as an exhibit for the 1933 World Fair, which will be built around it. The scene above represents a scene at the dedication on May 16.
